Search Tips

The format of permit numbers differ from agency to agency. A permit number consists typically of alpha-numeric characters. Sometimes, it may include special characters such as dashes ("-"). Spaces (" "), however, are not common. In most cases, permit numbers are not case sensitive. Here are two examples of what the permit number may look like:

- B97C2701
- 01BLD-00000-02701

You can typically find the permit number printed at the top of your permit printout. If you don't remember or cannot find the permit number, you can try performing a search by address.

Search Tips

License numbers can either be a number issued by the state professional boards or a business identification number issued by the agency. A license number consists typically of alpha-numeric characters. In most cases, license numbers are not case sensitive. Here are two examples of license numbers:

- 012345
- CA88811

Some agencies may not keep license number information and therefore may not return any data. If you cannot find the information here, you can try performing a search by address.
